Physical touching is an essential part of the care and nurturing of children. Children feel loved, accepted, and supported through the sensations of touch by nurturing adults and peers. However, physical contact should be respectful of the children's body cues and only occur with their permission. Employees, contractors, and volunteers must be sensitive to children's responses and requests for physical interaction, model appropriate nurturing touches. Except for safety, a child will always have the right to refuse contact. Please read the following:

Affectionate nurturing touch is vital for each youth's emotional health.

Affectionate nurturing touch includes shaking hands, a pat on the back, and/or a reassuring touch on the shoulder. Youth always have the right to refuse these touches.

Touches for restraint are only used to protect children and staff's physical safety or provide the least restrictive guidance necessary in a given situation. Through modeling and verbal guidance, children are taught to use words rather than physical interaction to settle their differences with others. Touches of restraint should be done as a last resort to prevent a child from injuring him/herself or others. Also, they should not be done in a humiliating or harmful way.

Inappropriate touch has a negative effect on the child. Usually, it involves the exploitation of the child or the satisfying of an adult need at the child's expense. An attempt to change a child's behavior with adult physical force encourages the child to respond in kind.

Examples of inappropriate touch include slapping, tickling, shaking, hitting, kissing, spanking, pinching, picking a child up by his/her arm, fondling, or molestation.
